GERMAN POLICE: BERLIN TRUCK ATTACKER USED AT LEAST 14 NAMES

The Tunisian man who killed 12 people last month by plowing a truck into a Berlin Christmas market had lived under at least 14 different names in Germany, a regional police chief said, raising more questions about security lapses. Anis Amri, shot dead by Italian police in Milan on Dec. 23, had been marked as a potential threat by authorities in the western federal state of North Rhine-Westphalia (NRW) in February 2016, some six months after he arrived in Germany and applied for asylum. "He acted in a conspiratorial manner and used various personalities," Dieter Schuermann, head of the NRW Criminal Police Unit, told the regional parliament during a briefing. The 24-year-old divided his time between NRW and Berlin, where intelligence officials also classified him as a potential threat. But there was a consensus among security officials that he posed no concrete threat, Schuermann said. REUTERS

FOUR CHARGED OVER BEATING BROADCAST ON FACEBOOK

2 Four young African-Americans were charged on Thursday with hate crimes in the videotaped torture of a white man with diminished mental capacity after they streamed it live on social media. Jordan Hill, Tesfaye Cooper and Brittany Covington, all 18, were each charged with aggravated kidnapping, hate crime, aggravated unlawful restraint, aggravated battery with a deadly weapon and residential burglary, prosecutors said. In the Facebook Live video, the attackers could be heard making comments about "white people" as the victim cowered in a corner, his mouth taped shut. At least one of the attackers could also be heard saying obscenities about President-elect Donald Trump. Police said they did not know whether the victim was a Trump supporter. REUTERS

VERIZON EXECUTIVE SAYS COMPANY UNSURE ABOUT YAHOO DEAL

3 A senior executive of Verizon said the company was unsure about its planned acquisition of Yahoo Inc's internet business. "I can't sit here today and say with confidence one way or another because we still don't know," Marni Walden, president of product innovation and new businesses, said at the Citi 2017 Internet, Media & Telecommunications Conference in Las Vegas. Yahoo came under renewed scrutiny by federal investigators and lawmakers last month after disclosing the largest known data breach in history, prompting Verizon to demand better terms for its planned purchase. However, Walden added that the merits of the deal still made sense. REUTERS

Debjani Roy defends the safety of public spaces for all people at Hollaback! AMANDA MIKELBERG

Hollaback! fights hate with intervention techniques

A rise in incidents of prejudice has the organization in high gear.

AMANDA MIKELBERG
@MetroNewYork
amanda.mikelberg@metro.us

An empty subway car is every bit as threatening, if not more so, than a crowded one. A harasser can direct attention at one person, and there's nobody else to judge or intervene, explains Debjani Roy, deputy director at Hollaback!, a global organization that mobilizes anti-harassment activism.

"People around you can be your defense," Roy said. "But you can feel just as alone in a crowded space as an empty one if nobody intervenes," Roy told Metro.

Hollaback!, which launched in 2005 and now has chapters all over the world, is underscoring its bystander intervention tactics because of the "political climate since the election that's inspired harassment and hate violence." It's giving people the tools to fight the abuse on the street, on campuses and online.

To combat online persecution, Hollaback! created its iHeartMob platform where people may report instances of harassment, request for help — and get support.

Roy referred to a December video of a white woman at a Kentucky JCPenny spewing her hatred at a Hispanic woman as many witnesses stood idly by during the tirade.

"Go back to wherever the f— you come from, lady," the customer said, and told the cashier, "Tell them to go back to where they belong!"

"From our own reports to figures published last week by the Southern Poverty Law Center, hate crimes since Nov. 8 spiked across the country towards every group," she said. In New York City, the harassment has manifested both directly, such as the couple who bullied a young woman wearing a head scarf on a Manhattan bus, and indirectly, such as the numerous anti-Semitic acts of vandalism around the city.

"From the moment we wake up in the morning, log on to social media, leave the house to go to wherever we need to go, we are at risk of harassment in almost every public space we enter," Roy said as she segued into Hollaback!'s Four Ds primer on bystander intervention.

Hollaback! provides webinars, advocates for officials to adapt anti-harassment programs and gives live seminars to unions, corporations and universities.

"The whole point of this training is to know what to do when we see this happening to someone else," she said.

Hollaback! — The four Ds

DIRECT: If you feel bold, if you and everyone else is safe from physical harm tell the harasser to stop, threaten to summon authorities or take a photo or video and let the harasser know you are recording them.

DISTRACT: Talk to the person being harassed in a friendly way. Pretend to be lost, ask for the time, or pretend to be a neighbor.

DELEGATE: Ask a store supervisor, transit worker, security person or faculty member to intervene. Call 311 or 911 and ask for help.

DELAY: When you can't get involved in the incident as it occurs, wait until later to help the person.

Crash investigators: LIRR train was traveling at twice the speed limit

The engineer "does recall entering into the station and controlling the speed of the train," according to investigators.

The commuter train that crashed at a busy Brooklyn terminal on Wednesday appeared to be traveling at more than twice the speed limit, and the operator has said he does not remember the moment of impact, federal investigators said Thursday.

The speed limit for the Long Island Rail Road train was five miles per hour at the location of the crash. "Right now, we believe the collision at the end of the track was over 10 miles an hour" when the train collided with a bumper at Atlantic Avenue Terminal at 8:20 a.m. on Wednesday, Ted Turpin, an investigator with the National Transportation Safety Board, said.

The accident left more than 100 people with injuries that officials said weren't life-threatening.

The engineer "does recall entering into the station and controlling the speed of the train," Turpin said at a news conference. "But then the next thing he realized was after the collision."

The 50-year-old engineer, whose identity hasn't been disclosed by authorities, has operated trains for LIRR since 2000 and has worked night shifts for more than a decade.

He was coming to the end of his first shift, which began sometime after midnight, after three days off, Turpin said. The engineer has undergone drug testing, but results are not yet available.

The crash was similar to a September incident in which a New Jersey Transit train plowed into a terminal in Hoboken, New Jersey. One woman died and 114 people were injured.

> "The NTSB needs to get to the bottom of the cause so that this doesn't happen to other New Yorkers."
> Sanford Rubenstein

Investigators expect to begin checking on Thursday night whether signals were functioning properly along the track, Turpin said.

In addition, most of the train will be removed from the station by Friday so investigators can inspect the equipment to ensure the power, brakes and other systems were working, Turpin said. The lead car, however, may take some time to extract from the station.

An injured passenger, Clifford Jones, on Thursday filed the first of what could be dozens of legal claims against the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, which operates the LIRR.

Jones is seeking $5 million in damages for "serious and severe personal injuries," according to the claim.

"The NTSB needs to get to the bottom of the cause so that this doesn't happen to other New Yorkers," said his attorney, Sanford Rubenstein.

An MTA spokesman declined to comment.

The collision is one of several in recent years that have focused attention on how rail agencies screen their operators for potential health problems, particularly sleep disorders. REUTERS

Amazon opening first bookstore in New York City

Amazon is planning to open a brick-and-mortar bookstore and café in Manhattan, according to reports.

The exact location is unclear with The Wall Street Journal reporting a Columbus Circle location and the New York Post reporting the online retail giant will settle in the newly developed space in Hudson Yards.

"I don't know if the final lease was signed yet, but I know the deal is happening," a source told the Post. "There's no way that deal is dying."

The new store is expected to open by the end of 2018 or early in 2019, the Post reported.

The Manhattan site would be the first East Coast store for Amazon, which opened a store in Seattle — the company's headquarters — last year.

Amazon has a bookstore in University Village, an upscale shopping mall in Seattle. SOUNDERBRUCE/FLICKR

Metro reached out to Amazon for comment on the new store, but is still awaiting a response.

Amazon also secured a $430 million contract with the New York City Department of Education, the nation's largest school district, The Wall Street Journal reported. The district has about 1.1 million students in more than 1,800 schools. KIMBERLY M. AQUILINA

Renderings show Financial District's next skyscraper

125 Greenwich Rendering and Model. RAFAEL VINOLY ARCHITECTS

After months of site preparation and foundation work, the Financial District's next monumental skyscraper has reached street level and is now set to rocket skyward.

Known simply as 125 Greenwich St., the site at the corner of Thames and Greenwich streets is a block from the World Trade Center and directly abuts the old historic Curb Exchange building.

The tower is being developed through a venture between SHVO, New Valley and Bizzi & Partners Development, which purchased the lot for $185 million from a partnership between Witkoff and Fisher Brothers.

Rafael Viñoly Architects has been tapped to design the building, and its website shows new renderings and a descriptions of the project design.

Like many new sliver-skyscrapers, the tower's form was purposefully shaped to be resistant to the wind and provide flexible layouts, according to Viñoly's webpage.

An eight-floor podium graduates into a sheer, glass-clad tower with two side-by-side shear walls evoking upended I-beams.

Floorplates are parallelogram-shaped and are nearly free of interior columns.

The west-facing rounded corners overlook the lush grounds of the memorial and beyond toward the Hudson River and harbor.

Uber headquarters entrance in San Francisco ISTOCK

Uber aims to halt NYC's demands for passenger data

Uber is hoping to slam the door on New York City's request to access certain data about its riders.

The city is looking to obtain information about when and where customers of ride-hailing services like Uber and Lyft get picked up and dropped off.

Mayor Bill de Blasio and officials at the city Taxi and Limousine Commission said they want the data to make sure drivers aren't working too many hours as part of the mayor's "Vision Zero" campaign to decrease traffic deaths.

Uber, however, sees it as an invasion of customer privacy.

In an email to customers on Thursday, Uber said the city wants to "piece together the full details of every trip you ever take. Several independent privacy experts have said this policy creates 'serious privacy risks.' And that it would give the government and anyone else who accesses this information a comprehensive, 360-degree view into the movements and habits of individual New Yorkers."

A TLC spokesman told The Washington Post that the information request is "nothing new" as pickup time and location data have been collected from yellow cabs since 2007 and green cabs since 2012.

"New York City doesn't need this data, and they've shown in the past that they cannot prevent it from becoming public," Uber concluded in its letter.

Data shows NYC's hard-partying neighborhoods

New Yorkers arguably party harder than most on New Year's, but they sure don't like having to set up or clean up those parties.

According to new TaskRabbit data from Dec. 31 and Jan. 1, New Yorkers hired twice the number of cleaners and repairmen as did residents in Los Angeles.

TaskRabbit is a digital marketplace where users can hire freelance repairmen, cleaners and the like to do their everyday chores.

Residents on the Manhattan's Lower East Side booked more tasks than any other New York neighborhood on New Year's Eve and New Year's Day.

Gramercy Park and Murray Hill hired three times as many handymen as cleaners. On the Upper West Side, residents booked hired more cleaners than any other Manhattan neighborhood.

Additionally, New Yorkers nearly tripled L.A.'s personal assistant tasks and doubled those in San Francisco.

Anti-Trump activists threaten suit over protest permits

The Partnership for Civil Justice Fund said it would sue the National Park Service, which manages spaces including the inaugural parade route and the grassy Ellipse near the White House, if the permits are not issued by Friday.

Civil rights lawyers threatened on Thursday to sue the U.S. government agency that manages much public land in Washington, accusing it of quashing dissent by not issuing permits for protests of Republican Donald Trump's presidential inauguration.

Up to 900,000 people are expected to pack into the nation's capital for the New York businessman's Jan. 20 swearing-in to his first political office. Some plan to criticize Trump's more controversial promises, including plans to build a wall along the Mexican border and deport illegal immigrants.

Protest against Trump GETTY IMAGES

Only three of the more 30 groups seeking to stage rallies either protesting or celebrating Trump's election independently of the Trump Presidential Inaugural Committee have received permits.

The Partnership for Civil Justice Fund on Thursday said it would sue the National Park Service, which manages spaces including the inaugural parade route and the grassy Ellipse near the White House, if the permits are not issued by Friday.

"Fifteen days before the inauguration, the National Park Service and the Trump Presidential Inaugural Committee are stonewalling and refusing to release permits that are vitally needed by organizers in order to plan and execute peaceful, lawful free-speech activities," Mara Verheyden-Hilliard, the fund's executive director, told a news conference. HOW TRUMP CAN TRIUMPH

CNN's Tom Foreman is the author of the book "My Year of Running Dangerously." @tomforemancnn

Corinne is the devil. Maybe not Satan per se, but she is clearly playing the role of "the bad girl" in the latest season of "The Bachelor." The minute she tossed her blond hair and planted a soul kiss on Nick, you knew every other woman on the show wanted to exorcise her from fake-dating land and fast. Sure enough, before the episode ended Shark Girl wasn't the only one baring her teeth.

It's pop-culture proof of an old adage: nothing brings rivals together faster than a common enemy.

Which has me thinking, perhaps this is the way Donald Trump may triumph despite his lack of government experience, his disregard for the advice of others and his indiscrete Twitter thumbs. If he frightens, infuriates and alienates enough people in both parties, there is a chance Congress could finally call a truce in its long partisan feud.

Hear me out. I know many congressional Democrats oppose the incoming president with religious fervor, while Republicans see his occupation of the White House as the crowning jewel in their sweep of political power. But arguably neither party can count on him to fulfill his expected role. For example, with the new year just days old, the GOP launched an ill-considered proposal to gut an ethics office. Did their pending president stand up for unity? No. Dems barely had a chance to howl before Trump publicly appeared on their side smashing the plan to pieces.

What's more, his proposals span the political spectrum. Sure, dismantling Obamacare, cutting environmental regulations and installing a conservative Supreme Court justice are solidly Republican. But expanding child care for working mothers, attacking trade deals for their impact on blue collar workers and holding banks accountable? Those are ideas many Democrats embrace.

So whether he means all of this, or understands how to make it happen, or — like Corinne — merely terrifies people on both sides of the aisle, he could be the excuse for political foes temporarily becoming friends, getting some things done and then taking all the credit for themselves.

Your guide to the best TV of winter 2017

When the temperature drops, it's time to binge-watch.

LAKSHMI GANDHI
@LakshmiGandhi
lakshmi.gandhi@metro.us

A new year always brings along a new crop of binge-worthy shows to go with it. Here's what we'll be watching in the chilly first few months of 2017.

"The Young Pope"

Imagine if the Roman Catholic Church was lead by a priest who is not only American, but is as spectacularly handsome as Jude Law? That's what "The Young Pope" gives you. While some viewers might be expecting a drama about a liberal, "cool" pope worthy of internet memes, Law's Pius XIII turns out to be such a hard-line conservative that even the cardinals who chose him are shocked. Needless to say, Pope Francis he is not.
HBO, Sunday, Jan. 15, 9 p.m.

"Riverdale"

We have to admit that the word "murder" isn't what comes to mind when we think of the Riverdale of the iconic Archie's Comics. But murder, intrigue and suspicion are all big parts of the CW's gritty new show "Riverdale," which follows Archie Andrews and his friends as they try to regroup after the most popular boy in school is found murdered. Cole Sprouse of "The Suite Life of Zack and Cody" fame plays Archie's best friend Jughead and is part of a cast filled with teen drama staples.
CW, Thursday, Jan. 26, 9 p.m.

"Sherlock"

Fans of the fictional detective got a New Year's treat with the return of the BBC's beloved modern-day adaptation on PBS. The fourth season continues with two more 90-minute episodes in which Sherlock (Benedict Cumberbatch) tries to mend a rift with Dr. Watson (Martin Freeman) while they grapple with "the most dangerous, the most despicable" new villain, Culverton Smith (Toby Jones).
PBS, Sunday, Jan. 8 & 15, 9 p.m.

"Girls"

It's hard to imagine that it's been nearly six years since we were first introduced to Hannah Horvath, the anxious and immature aspiring writer played by Lena Dunham. Since then, viewers have watched Hannah and the other girls navigate love and ambition in a very hipster Brooklyn way. Dunham said earlier this year that it was time to end the show because she "wanted to make sure we kept the momentum alive." Hopefully fans will feel the show goes out on a high note when things wrap up this spring.

3 Things to watch for as Giants take on Packers in NFC wild-card round

New York and Green Bay meet in the playoffs yet again.

KRISTIAN DYER
@KristianRDyer
sports@metro.us

Eli Manning and Aaron Rodgers will square off once again Sunday at Lambeau Field. GETTY IMAGES

It certainly hasn't been easy but the New York Giants are back in the playoffs, ending a four-year postseason drought. Now on Sunday at the Green Bay Packers (4:40 p.m., Fox), the Giants' potential run to the Super Bowl again goes through Lambeau.

The Giants' last two Super Bowl trips both included wins against the Packers, a mental edge for a team that has been hot since November. Green Bay comes in on their own hot streak, winners of six straight games, with an offense that is really clicking in recent weeks.

1 The secondary is primary

As much as the Giants will need their pass rush to get to Aaron Rodgers on Sunday, the secondary will have to be disciplined if they hope to advance in the playoffs. Rodgers is elusive and has a great pocket presence, willing to hang in the pocket to make throws and good enough with his feet to evade pressure and wait for things to open up down the field. And with targets such as Jordy Nelson and Randall Cobb, the Packers have big-play potential at the skill positions.

"I think we can line up with pretty much anybody. I think we've got a group of guys who go out there and play hard and continue to play no matter who's on the other side," Giants cornerback Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie said. "You just go out there and do your job."

2 Eli can't be regular season Eli

Twice a Super Bowl MVP, Eli Manning is truly elite come playoff time.

But Manning can't be the Manning of this past regular season, and he can't be the quarterback who has just four touchdowns and four interceptions in the last four games. That kind of performance, especially going up against an elite quarterback counterpart, will lead to an early playoff exit for Big Blue.

Yet Manning is proven in the playoffs, and that is calming for his teammates despite his down year.

"Having a guy like Eli is exactly what you want, and exactly what you look for in a team that wants to make a deep run," Giants wide receiver Victor Cruz said. "Having him at the helm, understanding what this is all about, and being in this position before can definitely give us an advantage, at least for the younger guys to look up to him and for us to have that much more confidence in our guys."

3 Been there but haven't done that

There's been a lot of talk this week about the Giants and their last two runs to the Super Bowl, how both championship seasons were wild card teams that won in Green Bay. For the 11-5 Giants, it is comforting talk. They've been there, they've done that.

Except that, not really.

There are only six holdovers from that Giants team that won the Super Bowl in 2011. This is a team that will have to go out there and build their own legacy.

The best bets for the first weekend of the NFL playoffs

Raiders at Texans (-3.5)
It's hard to have faith in the Raiders now that third-string QB Connor Cook will be under center, but in a potentially very low-scoring affair (the betting total is a season-low 35), they can keep it close and perhaps even beat the Texans in Houston. Turnovers could make the difference in this one. The Raiders have forced 30 turnovers this year while the Texans have forced just 17, and Oakland leads Houston in turnover differential plus-16 to minus-7.

The pick: Raiders +3.5

Lions at Seahawks (-8)
The Seahawks ended their 2016 campaign in a Jekyll-and-Hyde manner, sandwiching easy wins over the Panthers and Rams with surprising losses to the Packers and Cardinals before scraping by the hapless 49ers in Week 17. However, they seem to be in demonstrably better shape heading into the postseason than the Lions, who dropped their last three games and fell into a wild card position.

The Lions have been giving their backers heart attacks all season, as eight of their wins have come via fourth-quarter comebacks led by Matt Stafford. But their luck appears to have run out as they'll face the league's fifth-best defense by YPG (third by PPG) while playing in daunting CenturyLink Field.

The pick: Seahawks -8

Ben Roethlisberger looks downfield against Miami. GETTY IMAGES

Dolphins at Steelers (-10)
The Steelers have won seven straight games, their last coming with Roethlisberger, Le'Veon Bell and Antonio Brown all on the sidelines. They should be well-rested and ready to torch the sorry Miami stoppers that have surrendered over 428 YPG in their last five contests.

As for the Dolphins' offense, they did not look "ready for prime-time" when they were thrashed by the Patriots last Sunday. Jay Ajayi rushed for over 200 yards when these teams met in Miami on Oct. 16, but plenty has changed since then.

The pick: Steelers -10

Giants at Packers (-4.5)
The Packers handled the Giants at home on Oct. 9, and that was before Aaron Rodgers and company got on the roll they're on now. The Packers have won their last six games, with Rodgers passing for over 275 YPG. The Giants' pass stoppers have struggled to contain the last three pocket QBs they've faced, allowing an average of 262 YPG to Kirk Cousins, Matt Stafford and Ben Roethlisberger.

Unlike Rodgers, Eli Manning has failed to record more than 200 passing yards in four of his last six games. And with Green Bay's defense generating turnovers at an incredible rate (plus-13 differential last four games), Manning could get himself into trouble if he tries to force it downfield to Odell Beckham Jr.

The pick: Packers -4.5

Aries You'll be tempted to make last-minute alterations that will cause a rift with someone. Don't let your impulses take control and ruin something good.

Taurus An unexpected financial gain looks promising. Settlements, finalized contracts or even a gift or win is within your reach. Collect old debts and call in favors.

Gemini Get your money matters in order. Complete pending settlements, negotiations or any medical follow-up that is required to ensure you are in tip-top shape.

Cancer An emotional gesture will help you realize how much someone means to you. Gain insight into the possibilities that exist if you take part in a joint venture.

Leo You need to wrap things up quickly by doing what's necessary. Discussing your plans with younger or older friends or relatives will help you put things in perspective.

Virgo Re-evaluate what you have done in the past and think about how you want to move forward. A disciplined approach will encourage physical improvements.

Libra Discussing home improvements or joint financial ventures will be difficult. Set a budget and refuse to overspend. Look for hidden costs and find a way to cut corners.

Scorpio Don't think about what you want to do or ought to be doing, when you need to be taking action. If you are slow making decisions, you'll get left behind.

Sagittarius Size up a situation and take a step forward. Don't let the demands of others stand between you and what you want to accomplish. Don't give in to manipulation.

Capricorn You should take care of the small but important details that could result in delays if they go unaddressed. Handle matters personally instead of relying on someone.

Aquarius Share your feelings and make changes to your lifestyle that will enable you to cut corners so you have more time to do things you enjoy.

Pisces Refrain from making a commitment that you cannot fulfill. Taking on too much will be your downfall. Offer only what is feasible. Don't be impulsive. EUGENIA LAST
